Title of Thesis

Strategies, Challenges and best practices in implementing Black Economic Empowerment in selected South African companies

Summary

This study presents an exploration of the challenges, strategies, and best practices in implementing Black Economic Empowerment within selected organisations in South Africa. The focus for this study centred around the organizational implementation of BEE, which became an unavoidable imperative for many South African companies that wished to maintain long term profitability. The priorities and responsibilities of management in driving BEE, as well as the challenges, strategies, and best practices in implementing it, were investigated, using both quantitative and qualitative methodologies. Findings revealed that the government and BEE consultants can support organisations with BEE implementation. Various departments must be accountable for successful BEE implementation together with the sound guidance of managers and ethical leadership for genuine transformation. The study is of significance to South African organisations, engaged in BEE implementation, government and academics who are exploring development and transformation within South African organisations.

A proposed integrated model for innovative business leadership for the attainment of sustainable growth in small and medium manufacturing enterprises in KwaZulu-Natal

Summary

The declining contribution of manufacturing SMEs in the past few years has been associated with critical negative factors that affect the innovative leadership skills required to implement business innovation, manage a turbulent business environment, and achieve sustainable growth in the sector. The study aimed to identify the critical factors affecting innovative business leadership within manufacturing SMEs in KZN and to propose a prototype model for improving such leadership. The research findings indicate that manufacturing SMEs are severely affected by a variety of challenges and that they face significant hurdles that negatively affect their performance. The results of the study identifies education and training as major positive contributory factors affecting innovative business leadership. It further provides an extensive range of recommendations to effect remedies for the current challenges faced by the sector.

The Impact of eThekweni Municipality Policies on Informal Traders: A Case Study of the Northern Regions of eThekweni

Summary

The informal economy contributes about 5.2% of the gross domestic product of South Africa. It is estimated that it employs more than 2.6 million people which represents about 10% of the total employment in the country. However, this is considered to be low if it is compared to other African countries, despite the high unemployment in the country.

This study aims to assess and analyse the municipality's policies that impact on the growth and prosperity of informal traders as well as the challenges they encounter as a result of these policies. This study evaluates the policy and implementation at municipality level. The informal traders located in the northern parts of eThekweni forms the case study. The results from the study show that there is lack of awareness of the informal sector policies by the informal traders. Most of the informal traders are not registered and they do not see any benefits of doing so. The study showed that there was lack of involvement of the informal traders in planning as some of the stalls that were built by the municipality remain vacant due to several issues.

Summary

Tonderai Dari, A systems approach to mobilisation of local resources for climate change adaptation in Zimbabwe. The Zimbabwean government faces challenges in mobilising resources to tackle the socio-economic effects of climate change using the sectorial approach which breakdowns sectors and addresses their needs from such a viewpoint. However, a gap in amount required to fund adaptation and mitigation has continued to exist. This study applies a systems approach addressing underlying drivers of resource mobilisation and considers climate finance as an emergent characteristic from interaction of multiple factors. A systems approach has the potential to lead to sustainable climate finance mobilisation thereby impacting on larger economic performance for countries.

Distributed leadership at a South African University of Technology: A Multi – Stakeholder Model

Summary

Leadership has been an area of interest for millennia, but never more so than within a 21st century VUCA (volatile, uncertain, complex and ambiguous) world. Globalisation, massification, rapid socio-economic changes in tandem with the demands of the Fourth Industrial Revolution are all challenges faced by higher education institutions internationally. South African higher education has not escaped these leadership challenges. This study examined the issue of university transformation by assessing multi-stakeholder participation in leadership and governance at a South African University of Technology. The findings of this study demonstrated institutional viability, albeit, in a hierarchical, bureaucratic manner. It nevertheless highlighted weaknesses of 'soft' or people centred issues. This study established the appropriateness and applicability of using a systems thinking approach namely the VSM as a diagnostic tool to assess institutional shortcomings. In this way, it enabled appropriate recommendations and suggestions to improve the institutions viability to address the complexities facing 21st century higher educational institutions.

A System Dynamics Model of the Talent Pipeline for Strategic Responsiveness at DUT

Summary

Continuing concerns about quality issues related to the higher education landscape have given impetus to the urgent need for effective human resources talent management. Guided by this, employee engagement represents important human capital whose performance plays an important predictive role in universities achieving sustained success. The primary aim of the study was to identify the cause and effect of talent variables that influence the different components of talent and strategic outcomes. Through a qualitative multi-approach design, data was collected via a combination of document analysis and semi-structured interviews. Using the Durban University of Technology as the case study, employees from the categories of senior and executive management, middle management and the general employees offered insights into DUT's challenges with talent management and the impact on the success of a learning organisation. The implication for human resources practice was primarily related to the acknowledgement that the SD approach has far greater application potential than has been acknowledged.

Improving the efficiency and performance of the supply chain in the construction industry

Summary

The construction industry exhibits a number of relationships: here we are looking at the connections between supply chain, project management and leadership. Every construction project is unique but these realities remain: supply chain, project management and leadership. Lewis unpacks them through the lens of Soft Systems Methodology (SSM) a branch of Systems Thinking. Lewis explores how to find solutions to challenges experienced in the supply chain processes on a construction site in Rosebank, Johannesburg in the Gauteng Province. The study found that there was need for project managers to improve on soft skills: communication, supportiveness and trust amongst others to improve efficiency of construction projects.

Consumer decision making styles of Generation Y cohorts: Validation of the Consumer Styles Inventory.

Summary

Understanding behaviour patterns of consumers has been a major concern for marketers and academia to effectively develop marketing strategies for products/services. However, a distinction of consumer decision making styles remains unclear with shoppers only identified along lines of shopping for enjoyment or uninterested shoppers. Furthermore, generational evolution and technological innovation have altered consumer decision making styles to warrant a different approach in marketing products/services. Issues of smart shopping, entertainment and experimentation in shopping are yet to be encompassed in understanding modern consumer decision making styles. Tinashe in this study explored current decision making styles of South African millennial shoppers. Using recommended research methods, the study discovered nine decision making styles characteristic of South African millennials. These were value consciousness, indifferent price consciousness, confused by over-choice decision making style, high quality fashion consciousness, recreational consciousness, brand consciousness, creative-variety seeking decision making styles and habitual buying. The study provides a new perspective on young consumer decision making in a multi-racial developing country.

An assessment of customer satisfaction of service quality at Public Technical Vocational Education and Training colleges In KwaZulu-Natal

Summary

The focus of this study was to make an assessment of service quality at the selected Public Technical Vocational Education and Training (PTVET) Colleges in KwaZulu-Natal. Various factors determining customer expectations and perceptions towards quality service provided by PTVET colleges in KwaZulu-Natal were tested using mix method approached. This was done using SPSS tests. Five service quality dimensions were evaluated include tangible, assurance, reliability, responsiveness, and empathy. The findings reveal that service delivered to customers is not up to customer expectations. This study suggested the model that can be used by PTVET colleges in improving their services to the customers.

A critical assessment of the role of conversational leadership in overcoming resistance to change in public high schools in Umlazi District

Summary

Organisational Development (OD) and change management literature defines resistance to change as an impediment, an inevitable and natural reaction to change. South African Education System is challenged, especially in public schools due to several factors including teacher resistance to curriculum reforms. Resistance to change by school educators is one of the impediments to achieving the goal of quality education in the republic. The rationale behind this research was to critically assess the role of conversational leadership in overcoming resistance to change. It explored the contribution of conversational leadership concept in managing change in public high schools. A mixed methods approach guided this study. A questionnaire and interview questions were administered to principals and educators in five high schools in Umlazi District in KwaZulu Natal Province. The findings reveal that educators resist change as an indication of poor relationships between principals and educators. Furthermore, the organisational behaviour of the group as well as structural norms may act as constraints. The researcher recommends that a functional research section of qualified, competent and experienced professionals should be established at circuit, district and provincial levels. School principals should engage in an honest dialogue and discussions with the educators and all stakeholders for change to occur in schools.

Reducing spectator violence in Zimbabwe's Premier League through social prevention

Summary

The Zimbabwean premier soccer scene has long been dogged by the problem of spectator violence. The efforts to deal with the problem thus have had little effect and this has negatively affected the game and its supporters. This action research thesis reports the collaborative work done by an academic researcher and members of one supporters club to explore the nature and causes of the violence and to propose and implement effective ways of reducing violence by the club's own spectators and at its own stadium. These efforts have resulted in a significant reduction in spectator violence involving the club's supporters and have led to the formation of a new organization with membership from many clubs aimed at further reducing spectator violence in the Zimbabwe's Premier Soccer League.

Competitive Regions in South Africa: A study of regional planning in the iLembe District in the Province of KwaZulu-Natal.

Summary

Regional planning is widely used in different scales of spatial planning for supporting the economic development and competitiveness of nations. This study focuses on regional planning in South Africa since democracy and assesses the extent to which the challenges of economic growth and sustainable development as mandated by the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, have been met. The relationship between the local state, planning, public management and policy deployment is analysed using the case of the iLembe District Municipality in the Province of KwaZulu-Natal. The use of social constructivism and synthetic theory, using Laclau and Mouffe's discourse analysis and qualitative research instruments, investigates a regional territorial framework. The study proposes institutional reform and a place-based planning framework for district level planning.

The Use of Internet-Based Technologies in Elections Management Processes in South Africa towards the design of a framework: A Case Example of the Gauteng Province

Summary

Over the past two decades, new technologies have played an increasingly integral role in the organization of elections around the world. A number of countries have turned to a variety of technological solutions in a bid to make elections more efficient and more cost-effective, and to strengthen stakeholder trust at each stage of the election cycle.

The aim of this study was to develop a generic framework to guide the effectiveness of Internet-based technologies in safeguarding elections management processes in Gauteng, South Africa. To achieve this, the study adopted an artefact model to improve integrated human and technology performance, to develop a framework comprising views and opinions of elections stakeholders. Using a mixed-methods approach, with a stratified sample of 385 voters from four geo-political areas of Gauteng, the study found a significant correlation between the use of Internet-based technologies and election integrity in Gauteng. Based on the results, the study developed four predictive models to estimate the integrity of elections outcomes with technology integration in elections. These models were validated and found to be relevant to the context of South African elections.

The foreseeable Internet-based technology future may well support automated, digitised elections procedures and processes in four key areas of elections processes, namely voter registration, voter identification, voting procedures and real-time results.

HIV/AIDS and Higher Education in Lesotho – A Cultural Historical Activity Theory (CHAT) Analysis of Three Institutions' Responses

Summary

The purpose of this study was to interpretively analyse the fight against HIV/AIDS, referred to as 'response', in three of Lesotho's institutions of higher education (IHEs). This study uses cultural historical activity theory (CHAT) to qualitatively interpret the response in a country with the second highest HIV prevalence globally.

The findings reveal that conceptual tools - human skills and policies, do not mediate material processes such as planning, financing and reporting, resulting in a poor response. Despite the IHEs leadership awareness of need for change, an historical embeddedness in unchanging cultures and functional contradictions due to poor agency (by subjects), lack of policies (rules), finance, (tools), hamper the response.

This study recommends two new agency models. One is 'knit-working', which aims to improve responses by identifying key, specific, and rapidly doable 'nitty-gritty' inter-college activities. The second model aims to strengthen IHEs leadership agency through 3-Cs of commitment at top management, improved resources and capacity at middle management, in order to enable operational level services to evidence the concern over AIDS.

Monitoring and Evaluation of housing service delivery: A case study of the Midlands Province, Zimbabwe

Summary

This research investigated the monitoring and evaluation of housing service delivery in the Midlands Province in Zimbabwe and highlighted the challenges experienced in housing delivery, evaluated current housing policies and programs and elaborated on existing performance monitoring and evaluation systems.

The study revealed that local authorities face challenges when providing housing services, namely the, lack of motivated staff, lack of housing finance, inadequate houses the low-income earners, no new partnerships, and social media influence. This systematic investigation recommends a new housing model based on the premise that each sphere of government has specific managerial responsibilities to fulfil and that the M & E system should be utilised effectively. The study also recommends that the three tiers of government should work collaboratively in order to solve housing service delivery problems.

Integration of Pharmaceutical Care in rural Public Health: A case study in Ugu and Umzinyathi districts in KwaZulu -Natal

Summary

South Africa's Healthcare system being in transitional phase presented opportunity for pharmaceutical service development within the public sector, however, strong leadership with visionary advocacy and stewardship is indispensable. The National Health Insurance (NHI) mandate and the growing emphasis on primary healthcare (PHC) re-engineering, further strengthens the prominence of many healthcare professionals and processes towards equitable and quality healthcare service delivery, among them pharmaceutical services. This research sought to identify the gap in the provision of pharmaceutical care services within the rural public context. The outcome supported a need to integrate pharmaceutical care and that a Pharmacist can add a meaningful role to the delivery of optimal patient care. The barriers identified were transport unavailability for outreach services, language deficiencies, scarce resource equipment and the shortage of doctors and authorized nurse prescribers. Encountered limitations of time, distance and challenging terrain confined the research study to two rural districts wherein selective sampling further narrowed the clinics to ideal status. Future action research of a larger sample across more rural health districts and primary healthcare clinics is recommended to validate and expand the findings of the study which commits to apprise significant role players in Sub-Saharan Africa that may wish to pursue similar practice within a rural context, in the hope of changing "Africa's health care landscape".

Manufacturing industry energy related greenhouse gas emissions and Climate Change Mitigation policy: A case study of Zimbabwe's three major cities

Summary

Climate change is a complex global issue with risks ranging from natural disasters to economic and public health challenges. Greenhouse gases (GHGs) emitted from the combustion of fossil fuels during industrial activities cause climate change. In Zimbabwe, over 35% of GHGs derives from the manufacturing sector and this is projected to increase. Dingane's study contributes to the development of public policy for reducing climate change resulting from manufacturing in Zimbabwe. The study estimated GHG emissions in Harare, Bulawayo and Kwekwe, assessed the knowledge and attitudes of key stakeholders regarding climate change, identified the barriers to climate change mitigation and predicted the impacts of alternative policy interventions. Dingane found that knowledge about climate change, its impacts and mitigation was varied, and that finance was the main barrier to implementing climate change mitigation. Renewable energy and energy efficiency through a cap- and-trade system were recommended as the main policy instruments for climate change mitigation in industry in the respective cities.
