MESSAGE FROM THE CHANCELLOR

Ms Nonkululeko Nyembezi

Heartiest congratulations to the class of 2019.

Today you have achieved what has been so far the driving ambition in your life. It is a monumental achievement and you have earned the right to feel good about it. It is your time, so stop and take a moment to savor it. Give yourself a pat on the back and share the special moment with your family and friends who have supported you along the way.

The real value of a good education goes way beyond amassing knowledge. Over and above knowledge, what DUT has hopefully imparted to you is awareness of what is real and essential to be a good person. As you leave the safe space of a university campus, there will be many twists and turns you have to navigate. In doing so, don't give up on your values but be willing to adapt to life's ever changing circumstances.

March to your own drum. In this world of social media, comparing yourself to others has become an occupational hazard. Have the courage to choose your own path based on whatever your intuition commands you to do. You will not always be sure what is the right path to choose. But if you are true to yourself, that inner voice will eventually come to your rescue and indicate the right one for you, however tentatively. Follow your heart even if it takes you away from the well-worn path. Dream big and honour your dreams.

As important as this is, it is unlikely to be the most important moment in your life. Other challenges will come. So you have to keep learning thus dedicating yourself to life-long learning. This takes commitment and may lead you to places you can hardly conceive of today. Naturally there are bound to be failures along the way as you push ever higher. At those times, it would be good to recall Churchill's timeless words: "Success is not final; failure is not fatal; it is the courage to continue that counts." And while you're at it, take the time to learn from those failures – they are by far the greatest teachers.

As you graduate today and embark upon the next phase of your life, what I wish for you is that you find work that you love. For it is only by doing so that your creative juices get stimulated so you excel and produce great results. Don't lose faith if at first you don't find this; keep looking. And remember above all else that life happens at the point of movement, not thinking, worrying, imagining, planning, talking or whatever else. So take action.

All of us at DUT are enormously proud of you.

MESSAGE FROM THE VICE - CHANCELLOR AND PRINCIPAL

Professor Thandwa Zizwe Mthembu

Please accept my heartiest congratulations on what is a milestone in your life, your university graduation day. I am extremely proud of you and your achievements. You are, indeed, one of a very small group of about 20% of your peers who have diplomas and degrees. You are the cream of the crop!

The degree/diploma that is being conferred on you today will certainly help to broaden your horizons, open new opportunities and position you to play a meaningful and positive role in shaping your future and that of your family. With higher education being a public good, too, the investment you and your family have made in your education will also make a significant contribution to your community, our region, our country and the entire world.

The world will be looking towards you, armed with your knowledge, skills, innovation and entrepreneurial flair, to build on the achievements of those who opened the way before you, so that you continue the journey to make South Africa a better place. You will have to actively play your part to improve our country's economic performance, to enhance our political environment, to nurture our social cohesion and to prevent the degeneration of our society that is being exacerbated by violence, crime and corruption. We place a lot of faith in you. We are confident that you will not disappoint us.

Your graduation today means more than just receiving a piece of paper that confirms your academic prowess. Many of you have had to grapple with severe personal setbacks and challenges over the course of your study. However, you have become trailblazers in your families, villages and townships. Keep striving to grow and prosper. And, always remember to do things you are entrusted with the right way, with dedication, diligence, honesty, integrity, and with excellence and accountability.

Never forget that it takes a lifetime to build your reputation and only a moment to destroy your credibility. So, always try and ensure that you do not disappoint yourself.

Your qualification will be inconsequential, unless your knowledge and skills are employed to solve the problems that are evident in our communities and particularly, for the most vulnerable members of our society. As a result, our measure of student success cannot be limited to throughput rates alone. Ultimately, it is the quality of our graduates, the knowledge and skills that you have earned that will demonstrate the utility of your qualification.

We urge you to think carefully about the legacy that you will bequeath to your children and to your grandchildren, and to the country at large. It is my fervent wish that your legacy must be one of hope and not despair. It should be one of great values and ethics, and not bigotry and hate. It should be a legacy of peace, not violence. It should be a legacy of renewal, innovation and entrepreneurship, and not degeneration. It should be a legacy of development and not of wanton destruction. Let your efforts build South Africa, let them grow the African continent and let them guide our world into a safe and prosperous future.

As we unleash you to the world with your new knowledge and skills, innovations and entrepreneurial flair, we trust that you will choose to live and lead a value-driven, principled and ethical life. Despite whatever personal challenges you may face, always stay on the righteous path. Most importantly, always remember to savour this moment and the many other exciting ones that lie ahead.

This is your day! Congratulations to you, your family, your friends and to your community. You have made us proud. Here's to your continued success and good fortune...

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF CONVOCATION

Mr Siyabonga Vezi

Congratulations on your hard earned achievement!!

One's graduation is a time of celebration. A victory to be shared with family and friends. Sadly, Covid-19 has disrupted a number of our plans and operations, including the all-important Autumn graduation ceremonies. This is a situation nobody could have foreseen. Globally, we are undergoing immense adjustments. However, Covid-19 cannot take away from you, the immense sense of accomplishment and fulfilment of achieving your goals, for some under very trying circumstances. We applaud and commend your hard work and sacrifice that has culminated in you securing a place to being a productive, contributing member of society.

Remain positive. Remain steadfast in your goals. I am confident that the education and life skills acquired at DUT will hold you in good stead as you journey forward and carve out a successful career path. You have the power to shine brightly amidst challenging circumstances, including the likes of this pandemic. So go forth and conquer by being a beacon of hope and positive change in your communities. South Africa needs individuals like you to provide solutions to our societal challenges.

Your alma mater, DUT, has answered the call to provide assistance to the most vulnerable in the DUT community by establishing the Covid-19 Solidarity Fund: Committed, Compassionate. These funds will be utilized for care and support for those in the DUT community whose lives have been severely impacted by Covid-19. I encourage you to support this fund by pledging towards the DUT Covid-19 Solidarity Fund. Let's do the best we can, no matter how little it is. Collectively, it will make a difference. Together, we shall overcome the devastating effects of the virus.

To donate go to the DUT website (www.dut.ac.za), click on DUT Solidarity Fund and follow the prompts.

The virus has forced us to reassess our priorities. Our health and those of our loved ones are of paramount importance. So I would encourage you to continue practicing social distancing, washing your hands thoroughly for at least 20 seconds and always put on a mask when you step out.

Current challenges should not destroy vision, instead they must empower, drive each one to be creative and encouraged to find solutions.

Stay safe. Stay blessed.

Production of oligosaccharides from lignocellulosic biomass

Summary

Exploration of lignocellulosic biomass for the production of value-added compounds is gaining momentum. Biomass such as peanut shells, bambara, cowpea and sorghum are some of the indigenous crops of Southern Africa that are yet to be explored for value addition. Therefore, this study was designed to characterize these underutilized agro-residues for the enzymatic production of prebiotic xylooligosaccharides (XOS) and their application. A two-step extraction of sodium chlorite-delignified biomass yielded pure xylan from peanut shells (15.5%), bambara (12.3%), cowpea (13.6%) and sorghum (32.2%). <sup>1</sup>H NMR spectroscopy together with monosaccharide analyses revealed that all the xylyans were glucuronoxylan and shared similar functional groups as that of hardwood glucuronoxylan. Enzymatic hydrolysis of the xylyans resulted in the maximum yield of XOS at optimized parameters of 1% substrate concentration and 10 U enzyme dosage. TLC analysis of the hydrolysates from Thermomyces lanuginosus SSBP GH11 (T/GH11) xylanase was compared against GH10 and GH30 xylanases regarding their modes of action. It was observed that the properties of XOS were distinct with different xylanases and GH11 xylanase was more efficient on all the xylyans without the release of xylose. MALDI TOF MS characterization corroborated with the TLC results and showed signals for both neutral and acidic oligosaccharides. A series of computational approaches were also used to study the structure of GH10, GH11 and GH30 xylanases and their interactions with xylan. The in silico investigation suggested that T/GH11 was more suitable for coupling with xylan over GH10 and GH30 xylanases. The prebiotic efficiency of XOS was evaluated as a functional food supplement in a novel amadumbe bambara spread and prebiotic yoghurt formulations. The physicochemical and sensory evaluation of both amadumbe-bambara spread and yoghurt confirmed that both products have improved traits with higher consumer acceptance.

The candidate has published two papers and one book chapter in peer reviewed scientific journals and has presented his research in two national and four international conferences.

Title of Thesis

Extraction and purification of C-phycocyanin and genome analysis of an indigenous hypersaline cyanobacterium

Summary

An indigenous halophilic cyanobacterium capable of producing C-phycocyanin (C-PC), a blue pigment with the high biotechnological application was isolated from a hypersaline environment in Kwa-Zulu Natal, South Africa. The cyanobacterium was found to have several unique traits such as its ability to naturally produce a high amount of C-PC (45mg/g), grow at high salinity (120 g/L), fast growth rate, survive in varying nutrient and light conditions. In this study, a comprehensive polyphasic approach viz., cell morphology, pigment composition, and complete genome sequence analysis was employed to elucidate the taxonomic position of the isolate. Based on the genome analysis, the strain was identified as a novel species of the genus Cyanothece, Cluster Euhalothece. The full genome sequencing has further allowed us to understand the key genes and proteins responsible for its unique properties such as its adaptation environmental conditions, C-PC synthesis, and stress acclimation. The protein structure and physiochemical properties of C-PC was further predicted based on the amino acid sequence using in silico analysis. Furthermore, a cost-effective extraction method for C-PC with high purity was also optimized. The extracted C-PC showed high antioxidant activity ( $IC_{50}$  value of  $0.540 \pm 0.02$  mg/mL using the DPPH assay) and was thermostable up to  $45^{\circ}\text{C}$  at a wide pH range (5.0-8.0). A high yield ( $>400$  mg/mL) of analytical grade C-PC was achieved, clearly showing its commercial potential for C-PC production. This research provided new knowledge significantly contributing to the field of biotechnology.

This study has resulted in three peer-reviewed publications and was presented at one national and one international conference.

Title of Thesis

Online diagnostics for undergraduate engineering mathematics students at a South African University of Technology

Summary

The research focussed on the identification and improvement of the basic mathematical skills of university of technology students, enrolled in first year engineering at a South African University of Technology via Information Communication Technology (ICT) .

Evidence that a mathematical chasm exists, both locally and internationally, in the transition from high school and university level mathematics abounds. The extensive use of smart phones, laptops, tablets, for example by students to access the internet cannot be ignored and if utilised correctly, may indeed assist in learning. One way of overcoming the lack of basic mathematical skills of first year engineering students is the design and implementation of online diagnostics for pre and-basic calculus and to continue with such online diagnostics for in-course content.

The study entailed a mixed method approach utilising the learner management system Moodle as the primary driver of the online course. Engineering students participated in the research attempting quantitative online assessments in the form of diagnostic quizzes and assignments. Online questionnaires dominated the qualitative component of the study. Results and analysis reflect the enhancement of students' pre-and-basic calculus mathematical skills that online assistance provides. The research elicited ample data that supported the recommendation of implementing a comprehensive online mathematics diagnostic model.

Title of Thesis

Evaluation of veterinary antibiotics in animal wastewaters and their removal using advanced oxidation processes

Summary

Antibiotics are found in low concentrations (undetectable) in water sources and surrounding environments. Despite the low concentrations in the environment, they are associated with antibiotic resistant bacteria (ARBs) thus necessitating stringent legislations worldwide. The development of a suitable analytical method for the determination of veterinary antibiotics from a slaughterhouse wastewater and also the evaluation of the performance of biological and advanced oxidation processes (AOPs) for the remediation of wastewater containing these veterinary antibiotics is presented in the thesis. The most significant contribution of the research was the development of the analytical method for detection of the antibiotics and also the synthesising of a novel catalyst incorporated into the AOPs.

The findings observed a range in concentration of the antibiotics both in the influent and effluent wastewaters. Furthermore, from the remediation processes, it was observed that the biodegradation kinetic data obtained showed that 80% of the antibiotics degraded following a first order kinetic model with half-lives of 6-77 days. AOPs incorporating an Integrated Photocatalyst (IPCA) showed that almost 100% degradation of the targeted contaminants occurred within half-lives of 60 to 102 minutes. The IPCA was shown to be a suitable photocatalytic material for the complete degradation of these antibiotics

Occurrence and variations of cryptosporidium and giardia in wastewater treatment and receiving river basins

Summary

The presence of Cryptosporidium and Giardia, which causes diarrhoea and other gastrointestinal diseases, is a public health concern, particularly in wastewater used for irrigation. The aim of the study was to evaluate the occurrence of Cryptosporidium and Giardia in four KZN wastewater treatment plants (WWTP), as well as receiving water bodies and irrigated vegetation, and to account for viability and reduction of these organisms. Experimental methods included conventional filtration and centrifugation for detection and enumeration; immuno-magnetic separation (IMS) and epifluorescence microscopy for identification; molecular methods (PCR and qPCR) for species differentiation; and UV and chlorination for eradication. While the overall mean reduction after wastewater treatment was substantial for both Cryptosporidium and Giardia, both were detected at downstream sampling points and crops irrigated with river water. Giardia was reduced to a greater extent by chlorination and UV exposure compared to Cryptosporidium. Cryptosporidium and Giardia concentrations in all treated effluents exceeded WHO risk-based values and South African standards for raw water and irrigation respectively. Stricter regulations and alternative wastewater treatment methods may ensure improved environmental and public health protection.

A model to enhance job satisfaction for radiographers employed at selected public tertiary hospitals in the Gauteng province, South Africa

Summary

The aim of this study was to explore the role of intrinsic and extrinsic factors of job satisfaction amongst radiographers employed by public tertiary hospitals in the Gauteng province and develop a model to enhance job satisfaction and improve retention in the public sector. Exploratory sequential mixed methods design was used to conduct this study. Phase 1 was conducted through focus group discussions with five purposefully selected radiographers. The findings of Phase 1 were used to develop a questionnaire for conducting a survey in Phase 2 of the study. A self-administered questionnaire was used to collect data from participants in four selected public tertiary hospitals. The results from the two phases of data collection showed that the lack of career pathing was the intrinsic factor that affected job satisfaction. There were four extrinsic factors that affected job satisfaction, namely, government policies, unsatisfactory remuneration, working conditions and the inefficiency of the human relations department. The outcome of the study led to the development of a model to enhance job satisfaction for radiographers.

A model for the integration of homeopathy into the public healthcare system in the province of KwaZulu-Natal, South Africa

Summary

The introduction of complementary alternative medicine, such as homoeopathy into the public healthcare system exists as one of the potential resolutions to the burdened healthcare sector in South Africa. The aim of the study was to gather data from healthcare professionals in KwaZulu-Natal in order to develop a model for integrating homoeopathy into the public healthcare system. An explanatory sequential mixed methods design guided the study. Phase 1 employed quantitative measurement tools, where data was collected from medical doctors, nurses and homoeopaths through surveys. Phase 2 incorporated measurement tools, where data was collected from Chief Operating Officers as well as nursing managers through semi-structured interviews. The results revealed that the integration of homoeopathy into the public healthcare system would be complex in nature, due to the changes that would need to be made in both the public and private sectors. Albeit a model of integration was developed, based on the limitations identified in this study, further research needs to be conducted to investigate this phenomenon.

Guidelines to enhance the human caring attributes amongst the undergraduate nursing students and nurse graduates in KwaZulu - Natal

Summary

The aim of this study was to critically analyse the role played by theoretical and clinical learning experiences in influencing the development of human caring attributes among undergraduate nursing students and newly graduated professional nurses in the province of KwaZulu-Natal (KZN) in order to establish clear guidelines that could be used by lecturers to enhance human caring attributes among the nursing students. The convergent mixed method design was used to guide study. The study was conducted in selected KZN College of Nursing and University of Technology using the Caring Behaviour Inventory Tool. Data was collected from the newly graduated professional nurses and nursing students. The quantitative data revealed that the lack of resources, unconducive working environment and lack of management support impact negatively on the quality of patient care as well as nursing students' integration of theory into practice. Developed guidelines can be used by lecturers to enhance human caring attributes among the nursing students.

Strategies, Challenges and best practices in implementing Black Economic Empowerment in selected South African companies

Summary

This study presents an exploration of the challenges, strategies, and best practices in implementing Black Economic Empowerment within selected organisations in South Africa. The focus for this study centred around the organizational implementation of BEE, which became an unavoidable imperative for many South African companies that wished to maintain long term profitability. The priorities and responsibilities of management in driving BEE, as well as the challenges, strategies, and best practices in implementing it, were investigated, using both quantitative and qualitative methodologies. Findings revealed that the government and BEE consultants can support organisations with BEE implementation. Various departments must be accountable for successful BEE implementation together with the sound guidance of managers and ethical leadership for genuine transformation. The study is of significance to South African organisations, engaged in BEE implementation, government and academics who are exploring development and transformation within South African organisations.

A proposed integrated model for innovative business leadership for the attainment of sustainable growth in small and medium manufacturing enterprises in KwaZulu-Natal

Summary

The declining contribution of manufacturing SMEs in the past few years has been associated with critical negative factors that affect the innovative leadership skills required to implement business innovation, manage a turbulent business environment, and achieve sustainable growth in the sector. The study aimed to identify the critical factors affecting innovative business leadership within manufacturing SMEs in KZN and to propose a prototype model for improving such leadership. The research findings indicate that manufacturing SMEs are severely affected by a variety of challenges and that they face significant hurdles that negatively affect their performance. The results of the study identifies education and training as major positive contributory factors affecting innovative business leadership. It further provides an extensive range of recommendations to effect remedies for the current challenges faced by the sector.

Title of Thesis The Impact of eThekweni Municipality Policies on Informal Traders: A Case Study of the Northern Regions of eThekweni

Summary

The informal economy contributes about 5.2% of the gross domestic product of South Africa. It is estimated that it employs more than 2.6 million people which represents about 10% of the total employment in the country. However, this is considered to be low if it is compared to other African countries, despite the high unemployment in the country.

This study aims to assess and analyse the municipality's policies that impact on the growth and prosperity of informal traders as well as the challenges they encounter as a result of these policies. This study evaluates the policy and implementation at municipality level. The informal traders located in the northern parts of eThekweni forms the case study. The results from the study show that there is lack of awareness of the informal sector policies by the informal traders. Most of the informal traders are not registered and they do not see any benefits of doing so. The study showed that there was lack of involvement of the informal traders in planning as some of the stalls that were built by the municipality remain vacant due to several issues.

A systems approach to mobilisation of local resources for climate change adaptation in Zimbabwe.

Summary

Tonderai Dari, A systems approach to mobilisation of local resources for climate change adaptation in Zimbabwe. The Zimbabwean government faces challenges in mobilising resources to tackle the socio-economic effects of climate change using the sectorial approach which breakdowns sectors and addresses their needs from such a viewpoint. However, a gap in amount required to fund adaptation and mitigation has continued to exist. This study applies a systems approach addressing underlying drivers of resource mobilisation and considers climate finance as an emergent characteristic from interaction of multiple factors. A systems approach has the potential to lead to sustainable climate finance mobilisation thereby impacting on larger economic performance for countries.

Distributed leadership at a South African University of Technology: A Multi – Stakeholder Model

Summary

Leadership has been an area of interest for millennia, but never more so than within a 21st century VUCA (volatile, uncertain, complex and ambiguous) world. Globalisation, massification, rapid socio-economic changes in tandem with the demands of the Fourth Industrial Revolution are all challenges faced by higher education institutions internationally. South African higher education has not escaped these leadership challenges. This study examined the issue of university transformation by assessing multi-stakeholder participation in leadership and governance at a South African University of Technology. The findings of this study demonstrated institutional viability, albeit, in a hierarchical, bureaucratic manner. It nevertheless highlighted weaknesses of 'soft' or people centred issues. This study established the appropriateness and applicability of using a systems thinking approach namely the VSM as a diagnostic tool to assess institutional shortcomings. In this way, it enabled appropriate recommendations and suggestions to improve the institutions viability to address the complexities facing 21st century higher educational institutions.

A System Dynamics Model of the Talent Pipeline for Strategic Responsiveness at DUT

Summary

Continuing concerns about quality issues related to the higher education landscape have given impetus to the urgent need for effective human resources talent management. Guided by this, employee engagement represents important human capital whose performance plays an important predictive role in universities achieving sustained success. The primary aim of the study was to identify the cause and effect of talent variables that influence the different components of talent and strategic outcomes. Through a qualitative multi-approach design, data was collected via a combination of document analysis and semi-structured interviews. Using the Durban University of Technology as the case study, employees from the categories of senior and executive management, middle management and the general employees offered insights into DUT's challenges with talent management and the impact on the success of a learning organisation. The implication for human resources practice was primarily related to the acknowledgement that the SD approach has far greater application potential than has been acknowledged.

Improving the efficiency and performance of the supply chain in the construction industry

Summary

The construction industry exhibits a number of relationships: here we are looking at the connections between supply chain, project management and leadership. Every construction project is unique but these realities remain: supply chain, project management and leadership. Lewis unpacks them through the lens of Soft Systems Methodology (SSM) a branch of Systems Thinking. Lewis explores how to find solutions to challenges experienced in the supply chain processes on a construction site in Rosebank, Johannesburg in the Gauteng Province. The study found that there was need for project managers to improve on soft skills: communication, supportiveness and trust amongst others to improve efficiency of construction projects.

Consumer decision making styles of Generation Y cohorts: Validation of the Consumer Styles Inventory.

Summary

Understanding behaviour patterns of consumers has been a major concern for marketers and academia to effectively develop marketing strategies for products/services. However, a distinction of consumer decision making styles remains unclear with shoppers only identified along lines of shopping for enjoyment or uninterested shoppers. Furthermore, generational evolution and technological innovation have altered consumer decision making styles to warrant a different approach in marketing products/services. Issues of smart shopping, entertainment and experimentation in shopping are yet to be encompassed in understanding modern consumer decision making styles. Tinashe in this study explored current decision making styles of South African millennial shoppers. Using recommended research methods, the study discovered nine decision making styles characteristic of South African millennials. These were value consciousness, indifferent price consciousness, confused by over-choice decision making style, high quality fashion consciousness, recreational consciousness, brand consciousness, creative-variety seeking decision making styles and habitual buying. The study provides a new perspective on young consumer decision making in a multi-racial developing country.

A critical assessment of the role of conversational leadership in overcoming resistance to change in public high schools in Umlazi District

Summary

Organisational Development (OD) and change management literature defines resistance to change as an impediment, an inevitable and natural reaction to change. South African Education System is challenged, especially in public schools due to several factors including teacher resistance to curriculum reforms. Resistance to change by school educators is one of the impediments to achieving the goal of quality education in the republic. The rationale behind this research was to critically assess the role of conversational leadership in overcoming resistance to change. It explored the contribution of conversational leadership concept in managing change in public high schools. A mixed methods approach guided this study. A questionnaire and interview questions were administered to principals and educators in five high schools in Umlazi District in KwaZulu Natal Province. The findings reveal that educators resist change as an indication of poor relationships between principals and educators. Furthermore, the organisational behaviour of the group as well as structural norms may act as constraints. The researcher recommends that a functional research section of qualified, competent and experienced professionals should be established at circuit, district and provincial levels. School principals should engage in an honest dialogue and discussions with the educators and all stakeholders for change to occur in schools.

Reducing spectator violence in Zimbabwe's Premier League through social prevention

Summary

The Zimbabwean premier soccer scene has long been dogged by the problem of spectator violence. The efforts to deal with the problem thus have had little effect and this has negatively affected the game and its supporters. This action research thesis reports the collaborative work done by an academic researcher and members of one supporters club to explore the nature and causes of the violence and to propose and implement effective ways of reducing violence by the club's own spectators and at its own stadium. These efforts have resulted in a significant reduction in spectator violence involving the club's supporters and have led to the formation of a new organization with membership from many clubs aimed at further reducing spectator violence in the Zimbabwe's Premier Soccer League.

Competitive Regions in South Africa: A study of regional planning in the iLembe District in the Province of KwaZulu -Natal.

Summary

Regional planning is widely used in different scales of spatial planning for supporting the economic development and competitiveness of nations. This study focuses on regional planning in South Africa since democracy and assesses the extent to which the challenges of economic growth and sustainable development as mandated by the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, have been met. The relationship between the local state, planning, public management and policy deployment is analysed using the case of the iLembe District Municipality in the Province of KwaZulu-Natal. The use of social constructivism and synthetic theory, using Laclau and Mouffe's discourse analysis and qualitative research instruments, investigates a regional territorial framework. The study proposes institutional reform and a place-based planning framework for district level planning.

The Use of Internet-Based Technologies in Elections Management Processes in South Africa towards the design of a framework: A Case Example of the Gauteng Province

Summary

Over the past two decades, new technologies have played an increasingly integral role in the organization of elections around the world. A number of countries have turned to a variety of technological solutions in a bid to make elections more efficient and more cost-effective, and to strengthen stakeholder trust at each stage of the election cycle.

The aim of this study was to develop a generic framework to guide the effectiveness of Internet-based technologies in safeguarding elections management processes in Gauteng, South Africa. To achieve this, the study adopted an artefact model to improve integrated human and technology performance, to develop a framework comprising views and opinions of elections stakeholders. Using a mixed-methods approach, with a stratified sample of 385 voters from four geo-political areas of Gauteng, the study found a significant correlation between the use of Internet-based technologies and election integrity in Gauteng. Based on the results, the study developed four predictive models to estimate the integrity of elections outcomes with technology integration in elections. These models were validated and found to be relevant to the context of South African elections.

The foreseeable Internet-based technology future may well support automated, digitised elections procedures and processes in four key areas of elections processes, namely voter registration, voter identification, voting procedures and real-time results.

HIV/AIDS and Higher Education in Lesotho – A Cultural Historical Activity Theory (CHAT) Analysis of Three Institutions' Responses

Summary

The purpose of this study was to interpretively analyse the fight against HIV/AIDS, referred to as 'response', in three of Lesotho's institutions of higher education (IHEs). This study uses cultural historical activity theory (CHAT) to qualitatively interpret the response in a country with the second highest HIV prevalence globally.

The findings reveal that conceptual tools - human skills and policies, do not mediate material processes such as planning, financing and reporting, resulting in a poor response. Despite the IHEs leadership awareness of need for change, an historical embeddedness in unchanging cultures and functional contradictions due to poor agency (by subjects), lack of policies (rules), finance, (tools), hamper the response.

This study recommends two new agency models. One is 'knit-working', which aims to improve responses by identifying key, specific, and rapidly doable 'nitty-gritty' inter-college activities. The second model aims to strengthen IHEs leadership agency through 3 -Cs of commitment at top management, improved resources and capacity at middle management, in order to enable operational level services to evidence the concern over AIDS.

Monitoring and Evaluation of housing service delivery: A case study of the Midlands Province, Zimbabwe

Summary

This research investigated the monitoring and evaluation of housing service delivery in the Midlands Province in Zimbabwe and highlighted the challenges experienced in housing delivery, evaluated current housing policies and programs and elaborated on existing performance monitoring and evaluation systems.

The study revealed that local authorities face challenges when providing housing services, namely the, lack of motivated staff, lack of housing finance, inadequate houses the low-income earners, no new partnerships, and social media influence. This systematic investigation recommends a new housing model based on the premise that each sphere of government has specific managerial responsibilities to fulfil and that the M & E system should be utilised effectively. The study also recommends that the three tiers of government should work collaboratively in order to solve housing service delivery problems.

Integration of Pharmaceutical Care in rural Public Health: A case study in Ugu and Umzinyathi districts in KwaZulu -Natal

Summary

South Africa's Healthcare system being in transitional phase presented opportunity for pharmaceutical service development within the public sector, however, strong leadership with visionary advocacy and stewardship is indispensable. The National Health Insurance (NHI) mandate and the growing emphasis on primary healthcare (PHC) re-engineering, further strengthens the prominence of many healthcare professionals and processes towards equitable and quality healthcare service delivery, among them pharmaceutical services. This research sought to identify the gap in the provision of pharmaceutical care services within the rural public context. The outcome supported a need to integrate pharmaceutical care and that a Pharmacist can add a meaningful role to the delivery of optimal patient care. The barriers identified were transport unavailability for outreach services, language deficiencies, scarce resource equipment and the shortage of doctors and authorized nurse prescribers. Encountered limitations of time, distance and challenging terrain confined the research study to two rural districts wherein selective sampling further narrowed the clinics to ideal status. Future action research of a larger sample across more rural health districts and primary healthcare clinics is recommended to validate and expand the findings of the study which commits to apprise significant role players in Sub-Saharan Africa that may wish to pursue similar practice within a rural context, in the hope of changing "Africa's health care landscape".

Manufacturing industry energy related greenhouse gas emissions and Climate Change Mitigation policy: A case study of Zimbabwe's three major cities

Summary

Climate change is a complex global issue with risks ranging from natural disasters to economic and public health challenges. Greenhouse gases (GHGs) emitted from the combustion of fossil fuels during industrial activities cause climate change. In Zimbabwe, over 35% of GHGs derives from the manufacturing sector and this is projected to increase. Dingane's study contributes to the development of public policy for reducing climate change resulting from manufacturing in Zimbabwe. The study estimated GHG emissions in Harare, Bulawayo and Kwekwe, assessed the knowledge and attitudes of key stakeholders regarding climate change, identified the barriers to climate change mitigation and predicted the impacts of alternative policy interventions. Dingane found that knowledge about climate change, its impacts and mitigation was varied, and that finance was the main barrier to implementing climate change mitigation. Renewable energy and energy efficiency through a cap- and-trade system were recommended as the main policy instruments for climate change mitigation in industry in the respective cities.
