Life at a tertiary institution often requires some adjustment, not only to the academic work, but also to the lifestyle and the physical environment. After all, this is usually the first time living away from home, and the protection and safety of the family, for many students. Even for more senior students, it is difficult to predict future events that may impact on their lives.

In order to assist the students who may experience a range of personal difficulties whilst studying at the Durban University of Technology, the Student Counselling and Development Centre (Midlands) have compiled this brochure, with crucial emergency numbers that may be of use.

Hopefully, you will never need to use any of these numbers; however they are provided to make the process of seeking assistance easier, in times of crisis or emergency. As such, although today you do not anticipate needing any of these numbers, hang on to this brochure – just in case.
